Making All Saints Sunday Personal and Holy

by David Bone

As All Saints Day (November 1) approached, Martha looked forward to thanking God for Jayne, a new saint in her life. In worship, Martha's church remembered the members who had died during the previous year. But they also celebrated the lives and influences of living saints: those teachers, pastors, friends, musicians, and others who, through their daily life, had shown others the Christian walk and faith.

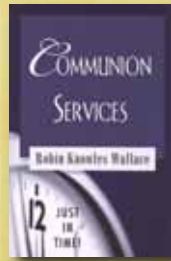

In January, Jayne shared with the DISCIPLE group that she had an aggressive and inoperable brain tumor. As her body became weak, her faith became stronger. The Bible study group met at Jayne's home many times so that she could participate. A few days after the group's final Communion service was celebrated around her bedside, Jayne joined the Church Triumphant.

What have you found to be essential for worship planning?

SURVEY

It may be a resource you "can't live without," a piece of advice from a wise mentor, a planning tool you use each week to keep the details straight, or maybe the mini-sabbatical you take each summer to be with God.

We'd like to hear what you've learned is essential for planning the most important hours of the week. Then we'd like to share your essentials with others who are still learning. You'll hear from other pastors and worship planners in different settings with a variety of experiences.

We'll roll up the results and share them with everyone. So be sure to share your great ideas today!
